LDK Solar Securities Litigation: Loss Calculation for Shahpour Javidzad

Losses During Class Period June 1, 2007 Through October 8, 2007

Loss Calculation Methodology

During the class period Mr. Javidzad bought or sold four separate LDK securities—LDK Common Stock (“LDK stock”), LDK puts at 70 expiring in October, 2007 (“puts @70 Oct”), LDK puts at 60 expiring in October, 2007 (“puts @60 Oct”) and LDK calls at 55 expiring in October 2007 (“calls @55 Oct”). Mr. Javidzad owned no LDK securities at the beginning of the class period.

Losses are calculated separately for each security in a manner consistent with the PSLRA. Damages are calculated as the difference between Mr. Javidzad’s cost to open the position he held in the relevant security at the end of the class period and his cost to close his position in that security after the class period. If a position was not actually closed within 90 days after the end of the class period the cost to close the position is calculated based on the average price of the security in the 90 days after the end of the class period.¹ If a position was closed during the 90-day period the cost to close the position is based on the average price of the security between the end of the class period and the date the position was closed or the actual amount received when the position was closed, whichever amount produces the smaller loss. Mr. Javidzad opened his positions in LDK stock by purchasing LDK stock during the class period at the market price and, after the class period, he was entitled to close his position by selling his stock at the market price. Mr. Javidzad opened his positions in LDK puts and calls by selling to open these securities at the market price during the class period. After the class period he was entitled to close his position by repurchasing the options he had written (buying to close) at the market price. The exercise or expiration of his options would also close his option position.

¹ Since 90 days has not elapsed since the end of the class period the “90 day” prices are calculated based on closing prices from the day after the class period through December 6, 2007.
